I began to loose interest when the author began talking about her own predictions, and then I started skimming the pages, not necessarily because I didn't believe, but mainly because I literally just lost interest. It felt like reading a research paper which also didn't appeal to me. If someone asks me about this book, I'll say it's very interesting. The whole time reading it I notice

"God can add nothing to the happiness of those who love, except to give them endless duration. After a life of love, an eternity of love is, in fact, an augmentation; but to increase in intensity even the ineffable felicity which love bestows on the soul even in this world, is impossible, even to God. God is the plenitude of heaven; love is the plenitude of man. 'You look at a star for two ...
